BY STEAMSHIP TO JUNE 2.

The German mail steamship Cimbria, Captain Trautman, which left Hamburg on Sunday, June 2—the same on Wednesday, and made her dock at a very early hour direct to New York, this very rapid passage is the shortest which has yet been made between the two ports. It will be seen that she made the voyage in, say ten days and seventeen hours. Allowing thirty hours for the run between the Elbe and Southampton, the time from the latter port was only nine days and nine hours, thus beating the time of the Cimbris's convert, the Hammonia, in her the time of the Cimbria's consort, the Hammonia, in her ran ended a few days ago. The passage of the Cimbria is equal to nine days and seven hours from South-ampton, and eight days eleven hours from Queenstown. The average speed was three hundred and twenty-six

The Derby-Disraeli Reform bill continued to make progress in the House of Commons. All that portion regulating the franchise had been got through with, and the committee was engaged upon the question of the redistribution of seats. The boroughs of Lancaster, Yarmouth, Totues and Reigate were tetally disfranchised on account of the bribery and corruption that took place in them at the last election.

At a meeting of the Council of the English Reform League in London, Mr. Brales, the President, complained that he was placed in a poettion of some difficulty. All their friends on the liberal side of the housewere doing nothing but complimenting the Chancellor of the Exchequer. It looked as if they considered the Reform bill the greatest boon that could be conferred on the country. The League, however, had yet a great deal to do, and he was not yet prepared to lower the banner of manhood suffrage. The League could also be useful in other matters. A resolution was adopted in

A Prussian named Rheinhold Jeiger was brought be-fore the magistrate at the Thames Police court, London, May 30, charged with forging Dutch coupons. The case excited a good deal of interest. The forged coupons have been so well got up that they have found their way tries also. The prisoner was remanded.

The cattle plage continued a source of antiety in England, and precantionary measures were being again strictly resorted to. During the week preceding the steamer's departure eighty-four cases were reported. The trial of Patrick Joseph Condon and Dominick O'Mahony for treason-felony was concluded on the 30th of May in Cork, Ireland. The prisoners were charged with being the Fentan Centres in Cork, and the principal witnesses against them were the informers Corydon and Massey. The chief ground of defence was that the informers were not corroborated by independent testi-mony, and a verdict of not guilty was returned by the jury after three-quarters of an hour's deliberation.

But a sudden case of perplexity has arisen to-night, and affords almost the only faint hope of the Emperor's life being spared. Notice has been served upon the President that Maximilian denies the jurisdiction of the court, on grounds of international law. I am a government, he says, recognized by every Power in the world except the United States, and I can only be tried by a legal congress of nations. Wheaton's work on International Law was at once in requisition; but there was only one copy in the whole of San Luis Potosi, and that belonged to a shrewd notary, who got his own price for it before he would give it up. Wheaton obtained, the Ministry have been in leliberation the whole night, and the council has not even now (midnight) broken up. What the result will

President Juarez is unquestionably in a dilemma. The newspapers and all the violent liberals are clamoring loudly for Maximilian's blood. All the crimes and outages of the French troops in this vicinity—and they are rages of the French troops in this vicinity—and they are legion—are charged upon his head.

On the other hand, if the President orders Maximilian's execution, he has been warned that he would lose the sympathy of the United States. Personally Juares would like to conciliate the United States; but the anti-American feeling has grown so strong here, especially since the unexpected fall of Queretaro, that it is quite possible Maximilian may be shot out of mere bravado towards the United States.

was a very pleasant one for amusement and show. There was an almost cloudless sky, a clear atmosphere. and a bright sun, shining with only sufficient intensity to temper agreeably the chill breezes that ever sweep across the cold bosom of the waters. The wind, though yachtman with delight. It was by no means sufficiently lively race. It came in fitful puffs, and weak gusts, now rising and twirling the gay streamers of the sharp-prowed and weakly against the impatiently fluttering sails, and finally dying away altogether, until there remained so galiant craft to float lazily on the stream, bound up in a on the numerous pleasure boals that flitted across the sparkling waters, gave tone to the sport of the day. The company gathered on board these excursion boats was worthy of the sport the had assembled to honor. Yachting has few rowdy admirers, and consequently the visitors to the scene of yesterday's amusement were of the highly respectable quality.

Arrived off the anchorage ground of the yachts entered for the race, a scene of novel and striking beauty meets the eye of the excursionist. White-winged clippers are on all sides of him. There they hie in a thick cluster, lazily heaving on the smooth rolling flood; there they sweep to and fro among the resting craft, like shuttles, weaving this fair fabric of white canvas and finely moulded huils. Steamers, cranky with the crowding to their sides of masses of spectators, lie motionless at the outer circle of the gay salling craft, and hilliputian vessels, steam yachts, dwarfed steamers, with paddle wheels or screw, perfect counterparts on the smallest imaginable scale of the giant see vessels, puff noisily about, perily saluting with their whistles, and flaunting the colors of the yacht club in proof of their quality, Hundreds of fine and swift sailing vessels, representing the yachtsmen of the neighboring cities, true craft decorated with fluttering streamers and gay signals, add to the adornment of the smooth waters. Craft of every imaginable description also mingle in the congregation. Here are tugs, and ferryboats, yachis, barges, canal steamers, and small boats of every quality and in any number. The shores of Long and Staten Island show to glorious advantage as a frame to this beautiful and animated picture. The bright sunlicht falling on their wooded heights and verdure-covered knolls, brings out every beauty of light and shade. The noat villas show their commanding towers or unique gables to peculiar advantage, and occasionally there is seen fluttering above the tree tops a bright banner, raised in honor of the occasion, over some mansion hidden from the a little stronger than usual sets them prancing and tugging at their books as if eager to dash around the course, and maintains the illusion that they are ventably "things of life."

SCREES ON ADARD.

Having inspected the yachts and made their bets the excursionists become clasmorous to be taken down the bay in order that they may be promptly on hand to see which vessel turns the lightship first and whether it is better to hedge or not. Scarcely waiting for the start the puffing logs and gallant steamers spatter and dash away through the Narrows in a lively race of their own for the Southwest Spit, as route to the turning point, the lightship. A race is improvised, steam is put on, and commotion prevails among the deck hands. Meantime the parsengers throng the bars of the boats and draw heavily on the resources of the dispenser of beverenges. Bets on the result of the race are freely made, and finally an enterprising individual conceives and puts into execution the idea of selling "poots." This creates a great interest, some excitement and no little merriment among the joyiel throng. The Paimer is the favorite at heavy odds among the passengers on the excursion boats, and sells at a high figure. Those who offer the odds, however, are noticed to be individuals who manifest the evident opinion that they are the "knowing ones" of the party. For the rest, however, each has his or her especial favorite among the cloud of white winged racers which are sweeping in a cloud astern of the boats, and the time is occupied in carvassing the merits of each. The provokingly variable winds are made the subject of a learned nautical dissertation from an individual who is so poor a sailor that he is finally cut short in his argument by being taken with sea sickness as the steamer near the Light Ship. Field glasses and lancheon are produced simultaneously, and as the steamer roil out toward the red hulled ship, which is decorated with many-colored bunting in honor of the party it is to play, the gay excursionists alternately scru with efforts that the yachts were enabled to hold their own.

ONWARD TO WEST BANK.

Beating dead ahead to wind, making repeated tacks, the yachts very slowly made headway, the Palmer tacking repeatedly, still beating to windward, followed by the Vesta and Dauntless. Passing under Fort Richmond old Boreas deigned hardly to breathe upon the anxious yachtsmen. Yet still on they crept making tremenduos erertion to advance. In answer to their prayer the breeze treshened somewhat, when the Phantom came down in handsome style to windward, with the Magic almost abreast to leeward. Here these yachts were tacked to windward and leeward, when the gallant Widgeon appeared and gave them a merry chase to Romer Shoais. At this time the Palmer was working quits up to the advanced craft, and bowling merrity along, when the little tug containing the judges, shot ahead in her efforts to overtake the sloop, which by the had almost reached the sloop, which by the had almost reached the receipt they received this nour the wind died awar.
